While, in order to help in finding a way out, the people will be, or at least should be, tolerant of past errors of judgment, they are beginning to discern the direction in which the ship is steering.

The time has arrived for an honest, speedy endeavor if the country is to be saved.

Any member of Parliament who act so blindly as to hinder a solution will deserve the country's condemnation.

THE MAN WHO WOULDN'T TALK

Our readers will welcome this week on page twenty-two the first of a new series of "Anne" stories by L. M. Montgomery, the famous author of "Anne of Green Gables," "Anne of the Island," "Anne of Avonlea," "Anne's House of Dreams," "Rainbow Valley," "Rilla of Ingleside," and others that were the "best sellers" of their day. These stories are new. They will not be published in book form until the autumn, so that readers of the Family Herald and Weekly Star will be the first to enjoy them.
THE MAN WHO WOULDNT TALK
by L.M. Montgomery, Author of Anne of Green Gables

Trix Taylor was called up in Anne Shirley's room one winter evening, pouring out her troubles at her best friend, who was the story-teller of all the young folk in town. She was known to be engaged, so that none of the girls knew her secret, and there was something about her. They said she was very clever, really a real beauty. But they took her for granted.

One evening, after Trix had been up in Anne's room, she came down to see Anne in the next room. She was to meet her father that evening, and she wanted to know if he would come over to visit her. Anne said she'd love it. She was always happy to have someone over to visit, especially Trix.

But Trix was very shy and didn't talk very much. She was a very quiet girl, and she always kept to herself. She was a very good listener, and she always tried to understand what others were saying. She was a very kind girl, and she always tried to be helpful. She was a very good friend, and she always tried to be there for her friends.

She had a lot of friends, and she always tried to make them feel welcome. She was a very good hostess, and she always tried to make her guests feel at home. She was a very good cook, and she always tried to make the best food. She was a very good friend, and she always tried to be there for her friends.

Partly laden with winter when he was laid to rest with humble.

Everyone has the limit of endurance, and Cyrus Taylor had reached it. He gave his chair a curious backward motion, and was instantly across the polished floor and struck the table on which the vases stood. The table went with the vases broke in the traditional thousand pieces. Cyrus, his husky white eyebrows furrowed and withی, stood up and exploded at last.

"I don't crook, woman... is one occasion... duty to blast... reputation forever... I was so bad with that magpie I didn't know what I was doing. And I'm dead! I'm Miss Shirley! I'm dead!"

"She didn't say you were, papa," cried Trix, who was never afraid of her father when his temper was fierce.

"Oh, no, she didn't say anything! None of you said anything! You didn't say I was sixty eight when I was only sixty two! You didn't say I wouldn't let your mother have a dog! Woman, you can have anything you want to to say and you know it. When I did I envy you anything you wanted."
